FACE

Funny how small your face feels when you're tired
and how absurd.
Skin lies thin
over rounded bone
the uplands of cheekbone, jaw, chin drawn close, leaning together across soft valleys of cheek, the unexpected promontory of the nose too big, too hard above the disconcerting contrast of blubber-soft lips concealing neat teeth.
Rubbing your eyes fingers enter deep vulnerable caves that draw you in, tempt you to push beyond the shooting sparks of light to penetrate the brain.
Beneath your touch your face feels so small all senses could be extinguished, the whole animated mask buried in two hands.

(From 'Loose Change' by Jane Evans)
