1. Daniel Woods is a very successful entrepreneur whose company, DW Engineering Ltd, makes brake-pads for large lorries. In a recent interview he was asked what motivated him to go into business. He replied “I knew that I had to satisfy my needs and wants to give me the luxury lifestyle I hoped for. I decided that the best way would be to start a business where I could provide goods and services at a price people were prepared to pay and would give me a healthy profit. The secret is to find the right product or service to sell and then to sell nationally and internationally”.

(a) What is the difference between needs and wants? Use examples to help you explain. [4]

2. A clever little concept www.girlmeetsdress.com is a dress-lending site that allows customers to borrow a designer dress for two days, a week or a month. Hiring a current season designer dress at £120 for two nights might not seem like the bargain of the century, but this is a chance to wear very expensive clothes which, had they been bought, might be worn only once. It's "time-share" fashion.

The selection of dresses is updated weekly with rental prices varying, depending on the cost of the dress. www.girlmeetsdress.com was founded by fashion expert Anna Bance, who carried out a considerable amount of market research, both quantitative and qualitative, to ensure that she had exactly the right stock to meet the needs of her customers.

Adapted from The Times, May 2009

- (a) Suggest and explain methods of quantitative and qualitative market research that Anna may have carried out before setting up her business. [4]

Now that www.girlmeetsdress.com is established in the market it is set to expand its service to include a range of designer clothes for men. This enables an asset-led approach to marketing.

(c) With the use of examples, explain the term asset-led marketing. [4]

4. The ‘Saith Seren’ (Seven Stars) is a social enterprise that operates as a Welsh Cultural Centre in the heart of the town of Wrexham in North Wales. The Saith Seren opened its doors to the public in January 2012. The centre houses a cafe/bar, offices and meeting rooms which generate income for the organisation.

The aim of the centre is to provide a place for social gathering and the promotion of the Welsh language through Welsh cultural activities. It is a place to meet people, to exchange information, and through the activities based at the centre, to promote a united, friendly community for supporters, learners and speakers of the Welsh language in the area and keep it safe for the next generation to inherit.

Using the information above, and use other examples to explain the key features of a social enterprise. [6]

- 5. John Lewis Partnership, which has 28 large (maxi) department stores located in major cities throughout the UK, have unveiled plans to open 10 “concept” stores, creating 3,000 jobs. The “concept” stores will be roughly half the size of a maxi department store.

Commercial director Andrea O’Donnell said that it represented a £100 million show of faith in UK high streets. She said: “There’s been a lot of talk of the death of the high street but we don’t believe it and we’re putting our money where our mouth is. Our experience shows that when we open a new store we also get a 10% increase in online sales in that locality”. The first branch opened in Exeter in 2012 and O’Donnell said all 10 should be open within five years.

This move back into the high street seems to be a growing trend with other firms like Tesco and Sainsbury also opening ‘mini’ stores. However, it’s not all good news, many other retailers such as Game and La Senza are disappearing from the high street.

Adapted from The Mirror, July 2011

Discuss the view that the recent changes in the high street benefit some stakeholders more than others. [10]
