The council is to swear as follows: I will give the best and most just counsel I can for the people of Erythrai and of Athens and of the allies, and I will not revolt from the People of Athens nor from the allies of the Athenians, neither I myself nor will I be persuaded by another to do so ... I will not receive any of the exiles, nor [...] I will be persuaded by [another] of those who flee to the Persians without the agreement of the Council of the Athenians and the People, and I will not drive out any of those who have stayed without the agreement of the Council of the Athenians and the People. If any Erythraian murders another Erythraian, let him die if condemned [...] if condemned let him be exiled from the whole Athenian alliance and let his money be confiscated and belong to the Erythraians. 5

Option B

Read the passage below and answer Questions 05 to 09 which follow. The Athenian representatives are speaking during the Melian Dialogue of 416/5 BC.

Athenians: Then we on our side will use no fine phrases saying, for example, that we have a right to our empire because we defeated the Persians, or that we have come against you now because of the injuries you have done us – a great mass of words that nobody would believe. And we ask you on your side not to imagine that you will influence us by saying that you, though a colony of Sparta, have not joined Sparta in the war, or that you have never done us any harm. Instead we recommend that you should try to get what it is possible for you to get, taking into consideration what we both really do think; since you know as well as we do that, when these matters are discussed by practical people, the standard of justice depends on the equality of power to compel and that in fact the strong do what they have the power to do and the weak accept what they have to accept.

Thucydides, 5.89
