Problems of Party Finance

As the membership of major political parties declines, so too does the total amount of subscriptions paid in by members. However, the day-to-day costs of running a major party are high, as are the costs of funding election campaigns. Parties are forced to find alternative sources of finance, such as rich individuals, private businesses or trade unions. However, once a party accepts finance from outside sources, it is open to allegations that donors are ‘buying’ influence on party policy. Anxieties resulting from a series of funding-related scandals has led to interest in greater state funding of political parties.

- (a) Explain what is meant by state funding of political parties used in the extract. (8 marks)
- (b) “A modern political party does not need a large number of members.”
Discuss. (22 marks)

Access Points for Pressure Groups

The growing integration of Britain into the European Union has brought a considerable increase in lobbying at the European level by British pressure groups. Where Westminster and Whitehall were once the sole target of pressure group lobbying, Brussels has become more important for some pressure groups. Although the European Parliament is far less significant than the Commission as a focus of lobbying activity, its increased powers mean that it too attracts greater attention from pressure groups, especially those representing consumer, environmental and animal welfare interests.

- (a) Explain what is meant by lobbying at the European level used in the extract. (8 marks)
- (b) Consider the most influential access points within the political system for pressure groups. (22 marks)

OR

- 4 Study the extract below and answer parts (a) and (b) which follow.

Text adapted from P. COCKER & A. JONES, Contemporary British Politics and Government (Liverpool Academic Press) 2002. Not reproduced here due to copyright constraints.

- (a) Explain what is meant by the term cause groups used in the extract. (8 marks)
- (b) Discuss how useful the ‘insider/outsider’ distinction is in understanding pressure group politics. (22 marks)
