Source A On 12 March 1938 German troops entered the Republic of Austria, with bands playing and decorated with flowers. The next day, Hitler announced the annexation of Austria to Germany. Yet not a shot was fired: it was a parade, not an invasion. Hitler had not planned the events – Schuschnigg's
5 desperate call for a plebiscite produced a crisis which Hitler did not expect. He was compelled to improvise. The danger of a European war arising out of the crisis was almost nil. Virtually the only possibility of conflict would have arisen from Austrian resistance to the German occupation.

Adapted from P BELL, The Origins of the Second World War in Europe, 1997

Source B Adapted from a speech by Hitler to his military leaders on 22 August 1939

Essentially, all depends on me because of my political talents. No one will ever again have the confidence of the whole German people as I have. There will probably never again in the future be a man with more authority than I have. My existence is a factor of great value.

5 The announcement of the non-aggression pact with Russia will come as a bombshell. The West had hoped that Russia would become our enemy, but they did not reckon with my great strength of purpose. Personal contact with Stalin is established, and von Ribbentrop will conclude the treaty. Now Poland is in the position in which I want her.
