Extracts for use with Section A.

Extract 1: From M MacMillan, The War That Ended Peace: The Road To 1914, published 2014.

The series of crises which occurred between 1905 and 1913 not only fuelled the arms race and the preparation of military plans and arrangements; they served to tighten the ties that bound each of the two alliances together and to deepen the gulf between them. By the summer of 1914, more promises had been made and obligations and expectations were heavier. In the minds of decision-makers and, often, public opinion, the memories and apparent lessons left by the crises also became part of their thinking in that fatal summer. 5

The first Morocco crisis of 1905–6 brought much better co-operation and understanding between Britain and France but it also brought greater obligations. The crisis served as well to draw the lines more sharply between the powers in Europe. With the signing of the Anglo-Russian Convention in 1907, yet another line was drawn, and another strand of obligations and expectations woven, this time between two former enemies. 10

Europe was not doomed to divide itself into two antagonistic power blocs, each with its war plans to the ready, but as yet more crises succeeded the first Moroccan one, it became more difficult to change the pattern. 15

Extract 2: From S McMeekin, July 1914: Countdown To War, published 2014.

A number of long-term structural factors made the catastrophe of 1914 possible. None of this, however, is sufficient to explain what happened in 1914. Mass conscription and the arms race was just as advanced during the First Bosnian Crisis (1908–09) and the Balkan Wars (1912–13). France and Russia were just as free to determine whether to go to war in 1914 as in all the other previous years of their military alliance. Austria had just as much interest in cutting Serbia down to size in 1912 and 1913 as she did in 1914. The Germans had no interest in the Balkans in any of these years. Russia could have found cause to go to war over Serbia in 1908, 1910, 1912–13, or the winter of 1913–14. Britain, having decisively won her naval race with Germany by 1914, could easily have stayed out of this Balkan crisis. 20 25

Without the Sarajevo incident, a great power war might still have broken out at some point in 1914. But there are good reasons to think otherwise. Without the murder of the heir to the throne in 1914 Austria would not have gone to war with Serbia, for one very simple reason: Franz Ferdinand would have remained alive. It was Franz Ferdinand who had blocked the Austrian military every single time they had advocated going to war – all 25 times in 1913 alone! 30
