- 2* In Source 3 [page 4 lines 13–14 Special Study Materials] Smith argues: “Essentially, the question is the extent to which the law should interfere with the freedom of the contracting parties to do business in such a way as to limit or restrict competition”.

Discuss the extent to which the courts' development of the law on restraint of trade has interfered too much with parties' freedom of contract in the light of the above statement. [34]

3 Consider whether or not the courts will find the following clauses in restraint of trade:

- (a) Andrew worked at 'Franks', a hair salon in a small village, as a hair stylist. His contract said he could not work in any "hairdressing or other beauty-related industry anywhere within the same county for one year after leaving". Six months after leaving Franks, Andrew has re-trained as a beautician and opened a nail salon in the same county, but in a city 100 miles away. [10]
- (b) Beth had a cake-baking and delivery business which was famous throughout the United Kingdom (UK). She sold it for £3 million. The contract of sale stated that she "could not engage in any food-related business within the UK for three years". One year after the sale, she would like to set up a restaurant in London. [10]
- (c) A hospital has signed a contract with Uniforms4U to purchase uniforms for its staff. The contract states "the customer may not purchase uniforms from any other supplier for 25 years and will pay a price as decided by Uniforms4U each year for the uniforms supplied". After two years, the prices charged by Uniforms4U are so high that the hospital would like to buy its uniforms elsewhere. [10]
