Christianity

Revelation is a safer and surer guide to truth than philosophy. Any truths about God taught by the philosophers can be found in scripture as well, but unmixed with error and enriched by other truths. Reason and philosophy aren't to be despised, however. Reason is needed to understand what is proposed for belief and to make the divine speaker's claims to authority credible. Nor should reason be discarded once faith has been achieved. "God forbid that He should hate in us that faculty by which He has made us superior to all other living beings. Therefore, we must refuse so to believe as not to receive or seek a reason for our belief..." (Augustine, Letters). The mature Christian will therefore use reason and the insights of philosophy to understand (to the extent possible) what he already believes. But faith remains a precondition of the success of this enterprise. For some things must first be believed to be understood. "Therefore the prophet said with reason: 'If you will not believe, you will not understand'" (Augustine, Letters). Augustine is principally thinking, in this passage, of the Christian "mysteries" (the Trinity, Incarnation, and so on). Yet he clearly believes that sound faith is needed for any adequate understanding of God.
