Section A

Answer question 1.

- 1 In his 1949 study George Murdock claimed that some form of family existed in all societies. This was based on his examination of 250 societies. Murdock defined the family as a social group that shares a residence, co-operates economically and produces at least one child. This child (or children) is the offspring, whether own or adopted, of two adults in an approved sexual relationship who are from the social group. Within this definition Murdock allowed for a great deal of family diversity in the structure of the social group. The smallest family group, as identified by Murdock, is the nuclear family.

Murdock's work has given rise to a great deal of debate within sociology as to whether the family is universal or not and if households which do not fit into his definition can in fact be called families.

- (a) What is meant by the term family diversity? [2]
- (b) Describe two examples of households which do not fit into Murdock's definition of the family. [4]
- (c) Explain why the family may be changing in modern industrial societies. [8]
- (d) Assess the view that the nuclear family is the main type of family structure in all societies. [11]

Section B

Answer either question 2 or question 3.

- 2 Explain and assess the view that families are no longer patriarchal in modern industrial societies. [25]
- 3 Explain and assess the view that childhood is a time when children are free from the pressures of adult life. [25]
