Dasaratha trembled with an unknown fear. The bow and arrows slipped from his hands. He stumbled towards the direction from which the voice came. There he saw a young ascetic named Sravana lying in a pool of blood with an arrow stuck in his body! He looked at Dasaratha, and uttered in pain: 'You committed a sin. I was innocently filling my pitcher with water for my blind old parents. Who will give them water now?' Dasaratha looked at him speechlessly. Sravana continued in broken sentences, 'Who will look after my parents in their old age? They have nobody except me. Go and fall at their feet and beg their pardon. Fill the pitcher with water and give it to them.' Then he fell back, moaning.
