Mark Scheme for June 2019

OCR (Oxford Cambridge and RSA) is a leading UK awarding body, providing a wide range of qualifications to meet the needs of candidates of all ages and abilities. OCR qualifications include AS/A Levels, Diplomas, GCSEs, Cambridge Nationals, Cambridge Technicals, Functional Skills, Key Skills, Entry Level qualifications, NVQs and vocational qualifications in areas such as IT, business, languages, teaching/training, administration and secretarial skills.

It is also responsible for developing new specifications to meet national requirements and the needs of students and teachers. OCR is a not-for-profit organisation; any surplus made is invested back into the establishment to help towards the development of qualifications and support, which keep pace with the changing needs of today's society.

This mark scheme is published as an aid to teachers and students, to indicate the requirements of the examination. It shows the basis on which marks were awarded by examiners. It does not indicate the details of the discussions which took place at an examiners' meeting before marking commenced.

All examiners are instructed that alternative correct answers and unexpected approaches in candidates' scripts must be given marks that fairly reflect the relevant knowledge and skills demonstrated.

Mark schemes should be read in conjunction with the published question papers and the report on the examination.

War was a serious business and a male audience would have enjoyed the ridiculous juxtaposition of Roman women and war. • Women's appearance was very important in the Roman world (to judge from statues of women) and so Ovid's descriptions are fitting. • There were many famous women in Greek/Roman mythology and it is realistic to expect that women will have been influenced by their actions. • Ovid does give some idea of the different status of his female pupils and does refer (obliquely) to the Julian marriage laws. • Seneca writes about his own relationships with women and so is keen to make this realistic and therefore persuasive. • Seneca represents relatable situations so that he can instruct his readers, 		if they offer a full and detailed response which does not do so.

	AO2 Candidates may demonstrate evaluation and analysis through the use of some of the following arguments: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The sources disagree about marriage. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Plato, in the Republic, sees procreation but not necessarily marriage as essential for the state. ○ Seneca sees marriage as an opportunity for self-sacrifice and therefore as positive, sex within marriage, for procreation, is permissible. • The sources agree on the danger of desire, but not that it should be avoided out of necessity: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Plato's description of Diotima's advice to Socrates in the Symposium. ○ Plato's description of Pandemian and Uranian love in Symposium ○ Plato says that the soul must be steered. ○ Seneca shows the physical effects of desire with his representation of Phaedra. ○ Plato's description of the physical effects of desire in the Phaedrus is less obviously painful. ○ Seneca compares lust to drink: both should be resisted as ruinous to the soul. ○ However, Socrates does suggest in the Symposium that desire for truth and beauty is a good thing. • The sources disagree on homoerotic relationships: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ The joy and importance of homoerotic relationships are described in Plato's Symposium but his position changes in Laws and the Republic ○ Seneca feels that homoerotic desire is not justifiable for a Stoic, given that the only justification for sexual pleasure is procreation. ○ Plato also suggests that homoerotic relationships come about due to slavery to pleasure. • Promiscuous relationships:

Question	Indicative Content	Marks	Guidance
	<ul style="list-style-type: none">○ Seneca strongly disapproves of sexual relationships with slaves.○ Promiscuous relationships are a threat to the state according to Plato.○ Promiscuous relationships are not in accordance with Stoic philosophy and therefore disapproved of by Seneca.
