Introduction

It was evident that a good proportion of candidates had been well prepared for the examination. Subject knowledge was strong and there was a pleasing focus on the wording of the questions. The most popular questions were the short response on sovereignty and the longer response on military power. The least popular response, perhaps unsurprisingly, was the long response on global economic governance.

As usual, there were a few key differentiators between candidates' responses. The key to success in responding to the questions set is to recognize that not one, but in the case of the longer essay response, four marks are being awarded for each script. Whilst Assessment Objective 1 (A01) knowledge may help a candidate to achieve 12 of the available 45 marks, there are still 33 marks available for A02, synopticity and A03. A large proportion of candidates score well in A01 because they provide detailed and developed knowledge and understanding with relevant and accurate work but they can fail to attain the marks that are available elsewhere. The intellectual skills required to perform at the highest level in A02 revolve around the ability to provide analysis, evaluation and parallels or connections. This can be a challenge for those candidates who rely primarily on production of learnt fact and knowledge. Synopticity, where candidates are expected to provide an awareness of competing viewpoints or perspectives, can be a weak area for some. The longer questions are designed for debate and discussion of alternative viewpoints. A03 can also be an issue for some candidates. There is a need to bring all of the earlier A0 elements into a structured and logical response which provides balance and use of appropriate political vocabulary.

It is absolutely important that teachers are aware of the 'Further guidance for Route D' document, prepared by the previous Principal Examiner, which can be found on the Edexcel website. This document provides additional content explanation and advice to support the initial specification document.

This was by far the most popular short question for candidates. Sovereignty is a key concept in the specification and background knowledge was, on the whole, pleasing. The majority of candidates provided suitable definitions and supporting knowledge. Some discussion of internal and external sovereignty and of legal and political sovereignty was provided. This was, of course, a two part question and candidates needed to move to an exploration and explanation of the implications of state sovereignty for global politics. This is where weaker candidates struggled to gain marks. Sovereignty implies that states are all powerful and that there is no other authority which can challenge their authority. The implication of this is that global politics operates in a condition of perpetual anarchy. State sovereignty also implies that all states are equal, theoretically, and that there should be no intervention in the affairs of other states.

This due to the controversal which came about Profestant Reposition the state without State sovereignty has now come to mean that all equal and autonomous, that the leader State has the nant to do what they that no state may another. huge implications for issues such as humaintanan intervention. The sovereignt, means was both that , and also that 160s may not intervene and by and police the issues, no matter how strong the moral argument against human right abuses. This is a endent in china's attitude. Not only does it commit atrocities within its own borders, but it vetoes. UN resolutions to intervene in any of its client tates each as the sudan Burma and Zimbabure, which also have temble human rights records. This means the the concept of thate covereignty can take a be make solving human rights abuses very difficult.

State sovereignty is very closely linked with political realism. This means that with these two ideas combined, rolving problems in the international relations can be difficult. It has implications for the puture of development and poverty. According to the concept of sovereignty, states must not intervent in other countries afairs. Combining this with the realist notion of self-interest creates a potent possess against giving aid or delt relief to countries in the developing world as some realist countries fuch as Pusira and China may feel that the less less economically developed countries must sort out their own problems. This could them the process of development.

To conclude, state sovereigney, somed by the Treaty of Westpheilia means that states have the night to do what they want without interference from other countries or 160s which can be damaging to the world order in terms of human rights and development flowerer, there is an ungument that was the the Westphalian concept of sovereignty is becoming us relevant due to concept such as the UN's Responsibility to lotect and the ICC.

This was a pleasing script which achieved a high level 3 mark. A clear knowledge of sovereignty and of the implications of the concept are evident in this response with some interesting observations about the impact on attempts to deal with global problems such as environmental degradation.

Question 2

This was a popular and straightforward question. The vast majority of candidates successfully described the structure of the Security Council and the system of membership with widespread condemnation of British and French membership of the P5. Most candidates also went on to point to suitable members of an expanded P5 in terms of power and geography. Stronger responses were able to use examples to demonstrate criticism of perceived veto abuse. There was some confusion from those candidates who believed that membership of the Security Council was linked directly and solely to nuclear weapons capability rather than reflecting structures of power dating to the formation of the United Nations.

This is a good level 3 response which covers the range of criticisms of the UN Security Council following a mostly pleasing introduction.

Try to ensure that, alongside an introduction to the general theme of the question, the issues arising from the question are also mentioned in the introduction.

Question 3

This again was a seemingly straightforward question covering territory that previous route D examination papers have covered. The key differentiator in this question was use of examples to support argument. Certain EU institutions can impose decisions on dissenting member states and candidates needed to make this clear with reference to bodies such as the European Commission, the European Parliament and the European Court of Justice. Clearly there are arguments that the EU operates in an intergovernmental manner and this point was worth making although the core of the question required discussion of supranationalism. Whilst weaker candidates could only make general comments about the powers of the EU over states, stronger candidates were able to cover a range of institutions in discussion of supranationalism.

A definition of the term supranational in the introduction would strengthen this response.

This response covers a range of EU institutions and there is a focus on the demands of the question throughout the main body of the response. This is sufficient to push the candidate into level 3.

Question 4

This was quite a good discriminator with a significant number of candidates setting the debate in the present rather than the Cold War past. Bipolarity is often associated specifically with the Cold War and the era of the superpowers. Stronger candidates were able to consider both the Realist and the liberal theorist view as to the implications of bipolarity with an obvious focus on stability in the global arena. Although there was confusion from some candidates, the majority of those who discussed the competing theories were able to explain the realist belief that bipolarity provides relative stability and the countering view, from liberal theorists, that bipolarity is inherently unstable. Stronger candidates were able to make reference to proxy wars, Mutual Assured Destruction and were able to draw brief comparisons with other periods of polarity.

After a rather brief introduction, this candidate moves to an analysis of both the realist and liberal theorist view of the implications of bipolarity for global order. The response is focussed on the title throughout with a strong level of understanding and excellent examples. This ensures an excellent level 3 mark.

This is another level 3 script which takes a slightly different approach in dealing with the question. The introduction is useful as it sets out an understanding of the demands of the question and makes clear where the response will take us. Good use of the Cold War period is made by this candidate with examples to support both the realist and alternative viewpoint.

Question 5

There were a range of responses to this question. Weaker responses discussed globalisation in general, rather than specifically cultural globalisation. Definitions were often lacking or were of globalisation in general. In addition, whilst there is a view that cultural globalisation can be equated to cultural imperialism; there is development to be made over and above a reference to McDonalds and Coca Cola. Stronger responses were able to use a more sophisticated argument to suggest that cultural imperialism was based on a global homogenisation that weakens indigenous cultures and values. Cultural globalisation is also seen to support economic globalisation which, to some, advances the interests of the major economic powers and of their transnational corporations.

rebellion or uprisings which loshout gether at the country which is receiving a gring the new cultural ideas An example of this is the see new terrorst manuals like 16 accels which violently disagree with the lightlyle of the vest and course massive damage in an attempt to defend that they see as their where which the see as which culture which the see as which culture which the see as what the world has also been questral to a extent. They, as martial before, has a known to have rejected the idea of amounts affect for and they at taking as board this idea that notice cultures in a country case be overrible by mallinetised against lies.

This response makes a reference to McDonalds and to Coca Cola, but also to the flattening out and homogenisation of culture worldwide as a consequence of cultural globalisation. The candidate makes pleasing reference to criticisms such as the flattening out of diversity and backlash to western cultural imperialism. The response may weaken towards the end but there are sufficient references to key criticisms and enough of a focus on the specific question to pull it into level 3.

The major problem with this question was the frequent absence of any definition of "global actor" or initial criteria for consideration. Answers tended to drift into a general strength and weakness of the EU or even consideration as to whether it is a Superpower or not. This was not a Superpower question. Stronger responses set criteria for assessing whether the EU is a major global actor and then debated the extent to which the EU meets this criteria.

The majority of candidates were able to debate the significance of the economic strength of the EU with some reference to the influence that this gives to the organisation and inevitably came to the conclusion that the sheer size of the EU in economic, trade and financial terms makes it a key economic global actor. Stronger candidates also discussed the structural power of the EU with reference to membership of bodies such as the WTO, G8 and G20. They also discussed diplomatic influence, soft power and may have included reference to the issue of global climate change in which the EU has played a central role.

The counter argument tended to focus on the desire of member states to retain control of their own foreign and defence policies, seen as key symbols of sovereign independence. Lack of a significant military arm with ability to project power within Europe and beyond was mentioned by most students with stronger candidates making reference to specific examples such as the EU's weakness in the 1990s in relation to atrocities in former-Yugoslavia and political divisions such as those over the Iraq war.

Whilst not the easiest script to read, this script is worth the effort because of the strengths of the response. The candidate retains a focus on the question throughout. There is a depth of knowledge and use of several strong examples to support the line of argument. A full range of criteria for the term "major global actor" are considered and there is a balanced argument throughout with competing views discussed and debated. This was a very strong level 3 script.

Question 7

This question was an effective discriminator. A significant number of candidates did not know what was meant by "global economic governance" and simply discussed the USA and EU and their economic influence. Some candidates, whilst able to discuss the WTO, IMF, World Bank, G8 and G20, produced very one sided arguments with responses centred purely around criticism of western dominance which weakened synoptic marks.

Global economic governance refers to the framework of coordination and management that is facilitated by bodies such as the World Trade Organisation, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. This framework was established by the 1944 Bretton Woods Agreement, with the orientation of these institutions being shifted as a result of the collapse of the Bretton Woods system in the 1970s and the emergence of the 'Washington Consensus' in the 1980s. The purpose of global economic governance is to provide a stable framework for sustainable growth in the world economy. Those who argue that it has been effective in these respects make a number of points, including the following:

The Bretton Woods system was effective in reducing the protectionism that had contributed to the Great Depression of the 1930s. The end of the Bretton Woods system and the rise of market-orientated policies under the 'Washington Consensus' laid the foundation for the accelerated globalisation that saw a significant expansion of the world economy from the 1980s through to 2007-08.

Stronger candidates provided examples of states which had benefited from the effective management of the global economy.

Criticisms focussed on the lack of coordination and effective management of the numerous agencies involved in global economic governance. Lack of flexibility to suit different circumstances of states was a regular criticism as was a criticism of the major institutions when it came to dealing with the global financial crisis that started in 2007/08 that led to a sharp down-turn in the world economy. The inability of the institutions to control and to regulate financial markets and banking systems was a common criticism. Further arguments, raised by stronger candidates, related to failure to promote economic equality, to deal with human rights abuses, to be more transparent, to be more democratic and to deal with environmental concerns.

This was the least popular of the longer responses.

economic problems such as a balance of payments crisis and the WB gives loans to Rs less Economically Developed Countries (LEDCs) to help them develop economically and to try and reduce poverty in these countries, about half of all WB aid is given to African countries. The WB and the IMF were both cet up in 1945. The WTO is the successor of the General Agreement on Tarrifs and Trade and its main aim is to promote global, multilateral free trade.

The IMF has been parcised to be effective because it gives loans with very low interest rates to countries to example, during the recent economic crisis the IMF gon bans to greece and Ireland, however it has been criticised for the conditions it attached to the loans.

Followers of the Liberal & approach to global epolitics believe that global economic gones ance is effective because it reduces anarchy in the global system because states, as liberale believe do have ethics and morals, feel deliged to follow the rules and policies of organisations such as the IMF, LIB and the LITO. They also believe that global economic governce has been effective because it has given states a forum to discuss ideas and to form mutual co quantities and to build trust and therefore liberalists believe that economic global governnce reduces conflict.

States acting altruistically because they are giving aid to poorer rections. However, the Mariet Mar money from them and to liberalise their markets to open up to foreign trade. Marxists would say that these ticles nations only donate aid to better thenselves for example to Multi-national Corporations exploit the deap labour from LEDCs to increase their profide but then instead of re investing this money back into the LEDS they look the profits back to their home countries. These conditions were mostly used in the 1800s and the 1990s and were benown as the Washington Consensus. FOR Matxists would say that the privatising state assets is not good for the approve of that country and they would point to the privatisation of the mater supply in Bolivia which resulted in higher prices because private companies wanted to increase profite but this to riots within Bolivia.

The World Trade Organisation has been proised by Liberaks who believe that encouraging free trade had to reduced conflict because states are interdependent of each other are cachette other and therefore more considerate For example free trade has led to Globalisation and this has led to China holding approximately $3 trillian $5 or in its reserves this means that the USA means to profect China's interests in its decision and policy making because in China and flore the American economy would be in source trouble. However, si monil orly the Chine needs to consider the USA in its policy making because it heavily relies on the USA's markets to call als products to Therefore, liberalists believe that economic global governce is effective because it has made dates way of entating over other. However, issociate balance the success of the WTO has been questioned because the Doha Round, also known as the Development Round, which is the latest rounds of regoliations has been frozen because LEDG wanted to copy the medicines of EDC's companies without paying them to the and it was frozen after Brazil and China led a walk out of the discuscion. Futlemore, Marxists, believe that the economic globel generance has been enoffeeting to implement how not benefitted this infant industries and tope have settled actually in creased powers. They also believe that the the economic global government and weighted working system which means that EDGs have more carried therefore Marristo some it is ineffective. Moreover, liberal say that economic global goverance has been effective because it has led to the benefits of 'composative advantage' therefore global production was increased. But Marxists Lismiss the idea of comparative advantage because they believe this theory is flamed because LEDCs do not have the machinery, skills or capital to produce bottom spods so are stuck producing primary good which have little value therefor vernain poor The importance and effictiveness of economic global governance was uncreased in the 1970s because of the end of the fixed currencies when all the currencies were pegged against the dollar. Therefore the economic global opherance bes is effective The economic global generance has been coilicized because they have done title to reduce environmental problems and the WB has only spent 17. on the wish comment and gave S. Africa a tremendow amount of money to develop the 4th largest coal Mining Unit.

In conclusion, economic global governme Los been effective to some extent received any aid that and had been praised by liberalists

but more ists believe that it sveess has been limited and may some actually work and the situation because especially in African

condict the Deep Woden

Horizon crisis in Nigeria, where huge amous of oil has been spilled. On the whole, they have been effective because more aid has been donated to poore v countries.

This is a level 3 response with particular strength in synopticity. Competing viewpoints are debated throughout and there is also a focus on the question. The introduction could benefit from a definition of global economic governance but the key institutions involved in the process are introduced early in the response. Whilst most responses focussed on the negative elements of governance, this response also discussed positive elements such as providing a forum for debate and reduction of anarchy in the global system as a consequence of the work of the key International Financial Institutions.

Question 8

This was the most popular of the longer responses on this paper and there were many pleasing responses. Stronger candidates were able to illustrate the competing viewpoints over this area of debate with some excellent examples.

Military power has traditionally been viewed as the chief currency of international politics. Realists argue that war is endless and imply that military power remains the only sure guarantee of a state's survival and security. Many candidates were able to explain that the security dilemma means that fear and uncertainty will always persist in international affairs. They also identified that there are new security challenges which have emerged, notably terrorism, that cannot be contained by non military means alone. Stronger candidates were also able to explain that military power has increasingly been used for ethical purposes, notably to facilitate humanitarian intervention and to support peacekeeping and peacebuilding initiatives.

The counter argument, raised by candidates, included that military power is redundant because large-scale high-intensity conflict has disappeared in many parts of the world, linked to the expansion of democratic 'zones of peace'. In addition, there has been a general shift from war to trade, as globalisation has increased economic interdependence and encouraged states to advance national prosperity through strategies of increased competitiveness. Many wars appear to be unwinnable because of the wider use of strategies of terrorism, insurrection and guerrilla warfare.

There was plenty of opportunity for debate from stronger candidates.

The obsolence of war is fundamental to the liberal standpoint on the decline of military power. The man factors that have evoded the presence of war reside within the spread of democracy as a result of globalisation. The spread of demo caay thus works to satisfy the ub ear view of the peaceful outrome of the Demo oratic Peace Thesis, with the prinaple here being the outerdopen shared values and wher dependence between states allowing for peace and cooperation as opposed to conflict. Find am entally, democracies do not go to war with each other. With the spread of democracy comes unddening zones of peace and thus enhanced peace and stability. Moreover the obsolence of war can be highlighted through the moned transformation of release morals under the international law of the UN. Here, moral attitudes towards have been changed and developed to deter the ideologies of conflict and war.

comes the prospect of a conflict of great powers each wishing to develop and exert multary dominance to ensure their security and power on the world stage. The military assert revers of Russia can be used to highlight this with its an flict with Georgial demonstrating its willingness to exert multary power in an attempt to retain or preserve in the weather than its sphere of 'Near Ab road'.

The a prospect of trade not conflict, adopted by the liberal standpoint, works further to highlight the decline in military pomer. Globalisation allows economic interdepend ence between states, making the prospect of var alot less likely due to its improfitable outcomes. Furthermore, trade allows a cheaper, easier way to achieving prosperty when compared with the costly, I dang easist demonts of soa to the use of military pomer to achieve prosperty. It is bell eved by the Liberals that "trade builds trust" and therefore with an inorasing interdepence found through that free market, trust between nations will grow and issuar nationalism which may lead to aggression will see a decline.

The nature of new war and the new challenges and recurby risks it brings is a argument highlighted by the realists for the dominance of military power. Terrorism is the key factor here, with globalisation all oliving terrorists the ability to operate on a transnational basis. The risk of weapons of mass destruction is a further challenge to State searty, with the increased flow of ideas and or formation though globalisation a erabling biological and chancel weapons to built by torongt oganisations much more easily. As result of these threatening prospects la state se curty, and more ober the teronst attacks of april and 7/7, states are finding theccessary to improve their mulitary capabilitiess creating more sophisticated military techniques in order to protect nsks. The multary down ance of the USA can highlight the continued presence of multary power, most recently highlighted though the invasion of Iraq under the war on Terror. Here, the USA dus regarded the & internation community and persited unlateraly to unadelag nonder to protect the interests of the nation state. The strengths of soft power and economic ufluence are important in highlighting the de line of military importance. The Eu's possesion of soft power through the ENP and its ability to ofer memb of ship allows it to me the behanour of potential members, for example, commitment to the Copenhagen Citera. The ufluence of economic power is further important, with those economically deniedo heri states able to offer and and trade concessions of a return of behaviour to from other states. The downtall of the Bush adminis hat ons war on terror is further valuable highlighting the dealines mulitary power, with the tactics usung encies and guerlla warfare challenging even the strong est military power. Is on the other hand will ughlight the importance of military power for humanitara intervention and in times of humanitarian crisis and emegency. The repercussions of noninternation could be highly definertal. to regional stability for example, whist presenting issues such as migration croses without military power! humanitaran intervention's such as Sierra Leone, East Timor and Northern lag would not have been possible In condusion, the obsolence of military pour is most endert under the progressions made by globalisation n spreading democracy and nterdependedce through trade, in hum working to promote peace and stability Softwardow However, the tittle is for from being totally justifiable, with the & dominance of mulitary power still highly endert within current global politids. The recent humanitarila interventions The importance of military power for protecting state securly is vitual, whilst challenges to possed by new war work only to norease the relevence of raditing power. There to re

it combe conduded that military power still enjoys a great relevence I, however on over I emphasis of this form of power alone may prove counter effective.

This was a well balanced response which clearly achieves level 3. There are real strengths and synopticity, in particular, is clearly evident with argument and counter argument running throughout the response. Interdependence, democratic peace thesis, zones of peace and increase in trade is balanced against examples such as the Russian Georgia war, the battle against terrorism and the dominance of the US which is partly built on military strength. The Iraq war is a good example to show the value of military power but also to suggest a value in alternatives like the use of soft power.
