Parks are nice places for walking and jogging. I especially like them in the mornings when the air feels fresh on the face. Around the corner from my house, there is a park which I particularly enjoy visiting. When I am a bit pushed for time, I drive to the park, leave the car outside and take a brisk walk for about half an hour.

On weekends I take some bread which I feed to the ducks and the pigeons. Sometimes, far from the stresses of everyday life, I relax by sitting on a bench and reading my favourite newspaper. I think it is fair that people are not allowed to ride bicycles in the park in order to prevent accidents.

My park has a children's play area with a dozen swings in it. In the summer evenings this part is very crowded with parents and children playing and running around, or waiting for their turn on the swings.

In winter it is a different story. As the days are shorter and nights longer, the park closes at sunset and children spend most of their time indoors.
