1 Study the following source material and then answer the questions which follow.

Source A The Reform Act was poor compensation for those seeking dramatic change in the system of representation. Although one in five males in England and Wales, one in eight in Scotland and one in twenty in Ireland were now eligible to vote, huge discrepancies existed nationally regarding who was enfranchised. The principle of owning property as a qualification for voting remained but, with a huge range of property values applying, there was little consistency in who got the vote.

Adapted from A MAYER, The Growth of Democracy in Britain, 1999

Source B Adapted from a speech by Lord John Russell in the House of Commons, 28 May, 1830

The first thing on which I base my plan for Parliamentary Reform is that there has been of late an increase of property for which we cannot find in the Constitution of this House any adequate representation. There are many large manufacturing and commercial towns which have no representation in the House. That is the first and most grave defect in the present system of representation. We feel it every day in the business of this House. We are really in need of representatives of the extensive interests connected with our woollen, iron, cloth, and silk trades, and with our shipping business.
