Sources for use with Section A.

Source 1: From the 1918 Constitution of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic. This was the first constitution of the Soviet state and was adopted by the Fifth All-Russian Congress of Soviets, 10 July 1918.

Russia is declared to be a republic of the Soviets of Workers', Soldiers', and Peasants' Deputies. All the central and local power belongs to these soviets.

The Russian Soviet Republic is organised on the basis of a free union of free nations, as a federation of soviet national republics.

In the present transition period, the constitution of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic involves the establishment of a dictatorship of the urban and rural proletariat and the poorest peasantry in the form of a powerful All-Russian Soviet authority. Its purpose is to abolish the exploitation of men by men and to introduce socialism, in which there will be neither a division into classes nor a state of autocracy*. 5

The Russian Republic is a free socialist society of all the working people of Russia. The entire power, within the boundaries of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic, belongs to all the working people of Russia, united in urban and rural soviets.

*autocracy – a system of government by one person with absolute power

Source 2: From an article in the New York Times newspaper, published 14 November 1982. This article was written four days after the death of Brezhnev. Here the writer is commenting on the Soviet economy during the Brezhnev era.

There is trouble in the economy. A wide range of difficulties in the Soviet system has been growing worse in recent years. The result has been industrial slowdown and agricultural stagnation. The Brezhnev leadership kept talking about these difficulties but avoided tackling them. It feared that fundamental reform, the only real cure, would upset the bureaucratic stability it prized above all else. 15

Every year, Western diplomats and journalists sent to Moscow arrive fully prepared for the scarcity of consumer goods in the Soviet Union. What they see confirms what they were told. Their reports contribute to the Western view of an industrialised society with a limited consumer sector. Yet, when I arrived in Moscow in 1979, the first thing that struck me was the improvement in living standards in the 20 years since I had last been there. Granted, standards are still woefully low by Western standards, but the Russians had a sense of things moving forward. 25

However, the economic reverse that had already begun in 1976 put a stop to improvements in living standards. Investment alone has not produced sufficient growth. Other stimuli, such as higher technology and higher productivity, were needed. And performance in those fields fell badly behind. Experts saw this as a consequence of an inefficient, overcentralised planning and decision-making system, preventing individual motivation and incentive. 30
