(Sophocles, Oedipus Tyrannus 1451–1475)

But let me live on the mountains, where this Cithaeron of mine is situated, which my mother and father – when they were alive - established as my appointed tomb, so that I may die because of them, who tried to kill me. And yet I know this much, that neither disease nor anything else could destroy me. For I would not have been saved while dying, unless for some terrible evil. But let my fate go wherever it will go. But don't, Creon, take upon yourself any thought for my male children.

They are men: as a result they will not, wherever they are, have any lack of livelihood. But as for my two wretched, pitiful girls, for whom my dining table was never set apart without me, but they always shared whatever I touched; take care of these two for me.

Best of all, allow me to touch them with my hands and to bewail my troubles.

Please, my lord . . .

please, nobly born. Touching them with my hands,

I would think that I had them, just as when I saw.

What am I saying?

Surely, by the gods, I do not hear my two beloved girls crying, and has Creon pitied me and sent me my two most beloved children?

Am I right?

(i) Lines 1–11 ($\dot{a}\lambda\lambda$) $\dot{\epsilon}a$. . . $\tau o\hat{v}$ βiov): discuss the tone of these lines. [9]
