2 Read Passage 1A from Herodotus, and answer the questions which follow.

Passage 1A

The Persian army was now close to the pass, and the Greeks, suddenly doubting their power to resist, held a conference to consider the advisability of retreat. It was proposed by the Peloponnesians generally that the army should fall back upon the Peloponnese and hold the Isthmus; but when the Phocians and Locrians expressed their indignation at this suggestion, Leonidas gave his vote for staying where they were and sending, at the same time, an appeal for reinforcements to the various states of the confederacy, as their numbers were inadequate to cope with the Persians.

3 Read Passage 1B from Herodotus, and answer the questions which follow.

Passage 1B

Of all the Spartans and Thespians who fought so valiantly the most signal proof of courage was given by the Spartan Dieneces. It is said that before the battle he was told by a native of Trachis that, when the Persians shot their arrows, there were so many of them that they hid the sun. Dieneces, however, quite unmoved by the thought of the strength of the Persian army, merely re-marked: 'This is pleasant news that the stranger from Trachis brings us: if the Persians hide the sun, we shall have our battle in the shade.' He is said to have left on record other sayings, too, of a similar kind, by which he will be remembered.

Herodotus, The Histories 7.226

(a) How far are the attitudes shown in this passage typical of how Spartans felt about fighting? You must refer to both this passage and other examples. [14]

Section B

Answer either Question 4 or Question 5Marks are awarded for the quality of written communication in your answer.

- 4 'Without Miltiades the Athenians would have lost at Marathon.' Using Herodotus' account, explain how far you agree with this view.

In your answer you should:

- give an account of the battle of Marathon and Miltiades' part in it;
- compare the part Miltiades played with other factors which led to victory;
- use relevant sections of Herodotus to support your answer;
- consider how reliable you think Herodotus is.

[30]

- 5 How far does Herodotus give us a clear explanation of why the Greeks defeated Xerxes' invasion of Greece?

In your answer you should:

- give a brief account of battles fought by the Greeks against Xerxes;
- explain why you think the Greeks won these battles;
- show knowledge of relevant sections of Herodotus;
- consider how reliable you think Herodotus is.

Option 2: Alexander the Great, 356–323 BC

7 Read Passage 2A from Arrian, and answer the questions which follow.

Passage 2A

In early spring, Alexander marched to the Hellespont, having entrusted Macedonian and Greek affairs to Antipater, while he himself led the infantry, which with the light-armed troops and archers numbered not much more than thirty thousand, with more than five thousand horsemen. His route passed alongside Lake Cercinitis in the direction of Amphipolis and the outlets of the river Strymon. After crossing the Strymon, he passed Mount Pangaeum on his way to Abdera and Maroneia, Greek cities settled on the coast.

Passage 2B

When Alexander reached Gordium, a desire seized him to ascend to the citadel, the site of the palace of Gordias and of his son Midas, and to see Gordias' wagon and the knot of the wagon's yoke. A popular local legend had sprung up about that wagon... The legend included a prophecy: the man who untied the knot of the wagon's yoke was destined to rule over Asia. The knot was made from cornel bark, and its end and beginning were nowhere visible. At a loss to untie the knot, Alexander was unwilling to let it remain intact lest this create public interest. Some say that on striking the knot he cut through it and then claimed that it had been untied. Aristoboulus, however, says that after removing the peg from the pole – for the peg that held the knot together had been driven right through the pole – he separated the yoke from the pole. How Alexander managed to undo the knot I cannot say with certainty.

Arrian, Anabasis of Alexander 2.3

A popular local legend had sprung up about that wagon... The legend included a prophecy: the man who untied the knot of the wagon’s yoke was destined to rule over Asia. The knot was made from cornel bark, and its end and beginning were nowhere visible. At a loss to untie the knot, Alexander was unwilling to let it remain intact lest this create public interest. Some say that on striking the knot he cut through it and then claimed that it had been untied. Aristoboulus, however, says that after removing the peg from the pole – for the peg that held the knot together had been driven right through the pole – he separated the yoke from the pole. How Alexander managed to undo the knot I cannot say with certainty.’ Arrian, Anabasis of Alexander 2.3
