Read the following article carefully and then answer questions 5 to 8.

Woolworths (a retail chain store) closed its last high street store in January 2009. This meant 27,000 people lost their jobs at a time when unemployment was rising.

One of these workers was Kate Meredith who had worked for Woolworths since leaving school. On her last day at the store she said, "I only know working for Woolworths, it's been so long since I applied for a job that I'm not sure what to do. And then of course there's my wages!"

Many experts blamed this example of business failure on the lack of quality of Woolworths' products compared to other high street stores, and that customers could often buy the goods for lower prices elsewhere.

Some people also blamed the fall in demand in the UK economy during the recession of 2009 as a factor which contributed to Woolworth's failure.

5	Identify two elements of the marketing mix. For each element explain how it could contribute to the collapse of a business such as Woolworths.

Read the following passage carefully and then answer questions 9 to 11.

Justino is a cocoa farmer from Belize, a less economically developed country (LEDC) in Central America. Up to 2002, he worked long hours but could not earn enough money to afford the basics in life due to the low price offered by chocolate companies for his crop.

In 2002, he signed a contract with the UK chocolate producer Green & Blacks which promised to buy all locally produced cocoa for the next three years at a much higher price than the farmers were used to. This gave farmers like Justino the confidence to expand, employ more people and help improve the quality of life for their families.

Green & Blacks is proud to display the Fairtrade Foundation logo on its products. It sees socially responsible production as a measure of success.

However, some people argue that the only reason businesses consider their social responsibilities is because it can give them a competitive advantage over their rivals and the opportunity to increase sales.
