6) When Pip sets off to Play at Miss Havisham's for the first time he stood in the churchyard reading the family tombstones. Pip had enough learning how to spell he was reading 'wife of the above' as a complimentary reference to his dad's exaltation. When Pip was old enough he was to be apprenticed to Joe but if any of his neighbour's wanted an extra boy to brighten birds, or pick up stones, or do any such job Pip would take it because he was saturated with the employment. Pip sat under the chimney-corner with his slate writing a letter to Joe and there was no indispensable necessity for his communicating with Joe's letter. ~~Joe~~ Pip really liked this girl at Miss Havisham's house and Pip couldn't get her because Miss Havisham just wants girls to bully boys because that's what happened to Miss Havisham so one evening Pip went outside to play with this
