friendship is important in the novel because Lennie and George ~~have~~ have an unique relationship, Lennie has mental problems and always gets into trouble but George is always there to pick up his pieces and to help him out. George is like the ~~father~~ Dad figure to Lennie because he always looking out for him and speaking for him making sure nobody says anything that may harm him or make him get ~~embarrassed~~ ~~anxious~~ or angry or even upset.

Sample I Q8

In 1930's America friendship was important because ~~the~~ America was going ~~to~~ through the "huge depression" and loneliness was happening, ~~friend~~ friendship was important because with all this going on you needed someone to stand by like George and Lennie someone to help you.

Lennie and George are good friends and are always there for each other. "You get right up an' take this pup back to the nest" George telling Lennie what to do for the best because he ends up petting the pup too hard at the end and kills it, Lennie takes advice but ~~the~~ the pup also has soft fur that Lennie likes to stroke. Their relationship is a good one as George always does things to make Lennie happier although sometimes it isn't a nice thing. Also in 1930's America disabled people wouldn't even be acknowledged or even looked ~~at as being important~~ at as being normal because of your disability.

Nobody would even give them a Job Or be anywhere near Friends with them back then they weren't classed and treated like a normal person. But ~~in~~ on the ranch Lennie is disabled and because of George and Lennies relationship George doesn't let any of the men/women on the ranch treat Lennie differently, this is how there relationship is so unique no matter what Lennie does or has wrong with him George always does whats right for him.

At the end of the novel George kills Lennie because he thinks it will be for his own good as he has been accused of rape, also back in 1930s America they didnt see disabled people as any good so it didnt matter if he was shot or not. because friends always look out for each other!

~~Also this~~ Also this could class as discrimination as you are just killing someone disabled before you have met them, discrimination in 1930's America was a big part as blacks and whites weren't around in the same room as each other. "No white man" Crooks. This suggest he didn't want no white man near him as he was black.
