From this extract we learn that curly's wife is a very evil and demanding person, we know this from when she says 'Listen, Nigger!' This shows us that she is not a very nice character.

We also learn that curly's wife is a very intimidating person. This is shown from Crooks' reactions as 'he sat down on his bunk and drew into himself' from this we know he is scared.

Also in the extract it shows that curly's wife is a very powerful woman, we know this from when she says 'you know what I could do if you open your trap'.

Write your answer to Section B Question (b) here:

The writer uses language which makes you feel sorry for crooks. This is shown throughout the extract, such as when the writer stated 'his voice was toneless' this impacts on the audience by showing Crook upset through his voice, making us feel sorry for him.

Also in the extract the writer used the statement 'Crooks seemed to grow smaller' this is showing the audience that he is very emotional inside a big man like himself. Making the audience feel the sympathy for him.

The writer uses small phrases such as 'Candy subsided' which is showing the audience that ~~Curt~~ Curlys wife is intimidating them without even using speech. The audience pick up on this and feel the emotions of the characters.

Write your answer to Section B Question (c) here:

Towards the end of the novel there is violence shown between Curley and Lennie. Both characters had a fight between themselves. The violence was described as extremely aggressive. ~~and~~ Curley thought he could pick on Lennie because he was 'slow' and childlike. Violence was very important in this scene because Curley was defied by Lennie, which was a good and exciting moment for the audience ~~as~~ because crooks think he can boss everyone around.

The violence that happened shows that the life at the ranch is a very difficult and hard place to work and live. The audience reaction to the life at the ranch is the feeling of sympathy, especially for Lennie as he tried to beat up Lennie because he looked like an easy target.

The ranch also comes across like a boarding school as the behaviour of the boss comes across as being very aggressive as he is in charge and if anybody steps out of line they are to be punished.
