The Richardson family are regular church goers to their local parish church in Stockport.

Along with other local families they have become very concerned at the condition of the large church cemetery, which, owing to council cuts and falling church revenue, has become badly overgrown. Along with deceased relatives there is a significant number of graves commemorating local servicemen and women who died in service, in particular some 53 who were killed in World War I.

The families have now formed a committee to try to restore this large cemetery to a good condition to honour the dead.

Discuss ways in which they could achieve their aim.

In your answer to this question you may use any information from Items A, B and C, in addition to your own knowledge. You must answer this question in sentences.
