Source Materials: Communist control over Eastern Europe from 1945

Source A: A diagram from a history textbook. It shows some of the methods used by the USA to weaken support for communism in Eastern Europe from 1945 onwards

1	Build up US defences. Making it too expensive for the USSR to keep up
2	Stop western and Japanese technology getting into the USSR
3	More use of US radio stations, such as Radio Free Europe
4	Financial aid to communist countries which protect human rights
5	Secret help for reform movements in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia

Source B: An American historian, writing in 1997, explains the views of Brezhnev about the countries of Eastern Europe in 1968

After the USSR crushed the reforms in Czechoslovakia in August 1968, Brezhnev made a speech in which he stated that relations with the countries of Eastern Europe were very important to the USSR. He also said that force was necessary to keep control of the buffer zone. His speech became known as the Brezhnev Doctrine. It made clear that the role of the countries of Eastern Europe was to protect the USSR. Brezhnev warned that if the government in any communist country tried to make capitalist reforms, other communist countries in Eastern Europe would send in troops to stop this. Many people in Eastern Europe hated this control.

Source C: A modern historian, writing in 2001, describes the views of Gorbachev and the USSR about the countries of Eastern Europe in 1985

When Gorbachev came to power in March 1985, he knew that the USSR had to find new ways of dealing with Eastern Europe. Gorbachev wanted to maintain relations with these countries but decided that in future, the people of Eastern Europe would be treated as partners of the USSR. He abandoned the Brezhnev Doctrine of 1968. The USSR would not send in tanks or troops either to defend unpopular rulers or to crush protests. Gorbachev believed that each country should sort out its own problems, but he hoped that they would remain communist.

Source D: A US Government spokesman, speaking in 1985, comments on the USSR's policy in Eastern Europe

We believe that the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe is likely. There has always been opposition to the communist governments of Eastern Europe and to the control of the USSR. Gorbachev has just announced that he will not use USSR troops to stop reform movements in the countries of Eastern Europe. Does he realise what he has done? It is only a matter of time before the people of Eastern Europe overthrow their communist governments.
