Rights in The Workplace

All employers have the responsibility to ensure that their employees' rights are met in the workplace. The "Equal Pay Act" and the "Health and Safety At Work Act" are two of the laws which have been passed by the Government in order to make sure that employers must follow all legislation relating to the workplace and that their employees are not discriminated against.

Employees have an opportunity to join a trade union at work and these trade unions look after the interests of employees as well as safeguarding the employer also.
