SOURCE A

Cultural Identity

Your identity is formed by a number of different things such as your individual likes, dislikes and beliefs. Cultural identity is about your language, beliefs, music and customs. Culture is learned. None of us live in isolation. We all come together to share knowledge, skills and ideas. Being part of a group can give a sense of belonging.

However, expressions of cultural identity can be contentious and cause conflict, especially when one group assumes that their way of doing things is better than other groups. Living in a multicultural society has an impact on many organisations. Every public body must promote inclusion. Schools promote inclusion in a number of ways, for example, by having an inclusion policy, a buddy system and cultural celebrations.

Family Relationships

There are many different types of families such as nuclear family, single parent, extended family, step or blended family. The family home is where most people learn how to relate to other people and to cope with life in the outside world.

When children are young their parents do everything for them including making decisions. As they grow older parents teach children how to do things for themselves and to help around the home.

As the child becomes a teenager conflict can occur in families when a young person wants greater freedom and independence to live their own lives.

Good communication can help maintain healthy family relationships. Talking and listening to each other will help resolve any issues between family members and help to keep the relationships happy and strong.

There are a number of ways a family could improve communication:

- Use family meal times to talk and listen
- Write notes to each other, like a message board
- Always ask if you want to borrow something
- Work out a timetable to take turns using the computer or TV
- Make a rule that if one person is talking, the others are listening

Migration and New Technologies

People from Northern Ireland choose to leave the country for a variety of reasons. Some economic reasons may include the prospect of better career opportunities or a change of job.

On the other hand many immigrants come to live and work in Northern Ireland. This means that employers will have a wider choice of applicants for jobs. These migrant workers can share their skills and knowledge with local people, as well as bringing cultural diversity to Northern Ireland.

Over the past few years many businesses have invested in new technologies and the use of the Internet has also proved to be very worthwhile with individuals.
