SOURCE A

In a democracy people have a right to vote and to elect a government. In a democracy there are laws to protect people. Citizens have Human Rights and can freely express their views.

Young people are encouraged to support democracy by participating in volunteer work. This helps young people to learn about community and citizenship issues and to develop skills such as working with others. They can also make new friends and build relations with others from different cultures.

Young people can also become involved in global issues. For example, they could work with Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs) which aim to reduce poverty in poorer countries. They help people living in poverty by fundraising. They use the money raised to provide food, water, medical supplies and to educate people to become self-sufficient. However, they may have limited funding and limited staff.
