Employees at Work

Staff absenteeism can be a problem for employers which may result in a loss of profit for the business. Employees may have to be trained in various skills to cope with staff absences.

Some businesses employ students on a part-time basis to help out in the evenings and at weekends. However, this can have a negative impact on the student, for example, they may not have enough time to do their homework.

Many employees consider further learning whilst they are employed. This could assist the employee with developing their existing skills or acquire new skills in order to increase their knowledge of various jobs. However, gaining further learning does not necessarily mean any further enhancement for the employee.
