Eretria surrenders to the Romans even though there is a Macedonian garrison in the city and an offer of help from the king of Macedon's regional commander, Philocles. However, the Romans do not gain much from their capture.

Eretria summa vi oppugnabatur. imperator Romanus plurimas machinas tulerat ut urbem quam celerrime caperet. oppidani¹ primo segniter² muros defendebant; deinde, multis iam fessis vulnerisque, cum muri partem eversam operibus hostium vidissent, se dedere constituerunt. sed erat in urbe praesidium³ Macedonum⁴ quos non minus⁵ quam Romanos timebant; et Philocles, regis praefectus, a proximo oppido nuntios misit qui nuntiarent praefectum brevi tempore perventurum esse si sustinerent obsidionem⁶. illi, in pacem intenti, tam segniter² munera belli⁷ efficiebant ut, ceteris neglectis⁸, solum eam partem muri quae deleta erat defenderent. dux igitur Romanus media nocte, impetu scalis⁹ facto, ab ea parte quae minime suspecta erat¹⁰, urbem cepit. omnes cives cum coniugibus¹¹ ac liberis in arcem fugerunt. mox in deditioem¹² venerunt. in oppido autem pecuniae aut praedae aut auri¹³ non multum fuit.
