PART A

Question 1

You are acting for Larry Glover who is on trial together with Nathan Thomas on charges arising out of a series of armed robberies that occurred in Sydney in 2011. On 4 May the Nelson Hotel in Bondi Junction and the Sands Hotel in Maroubra were robbed; on 7 June the Rose of Australia Hotel in Erskineville and the Excelsior Hotel in Surry Hills were robbed.

Vincent Rubber, the manager of the Excelsior Hotel testifies that on the evening of 7 June he came out of the toilet to find a man dressed in black pointing a black pistol at him. He identifies Glover in the dock as that man. He had not been asked to pick him out of an identification parade. You call a psychologist to testify that it is her opinion on the basis of many experimental studies that if the account is correct Rubber's attention would have been focussed on the gun to the exclusion of the facial features of the person holding it.

A recording of an interview of Nathan Thomas has been introduced into evidence. In the interview Nathan is heard to say "Larry and I carried out those hits together".

Dr Freud, a psychiatrist interviewed both of the accused. He is prepared to testify that Thomas has a high IQ and a dominant personality, while Glover is much less intelligent and a submissive personality. It is his opinion that "Glover was little more than a gofer."

Comment on the admissibility of the evidence and indicate what directions you will seek from the judge. Include in your comments the issue of whether evidence about the other robberies can be used when determining whether Glover is guilty of the robbery at the Excelsior Hotel.

Question 2

Emmylou Smithers is suing Embers and Ash Ltd the major retail firm for $1.3 million claiming she suffered nervous shock and attempted suicide as a result of the sexual harassment of her supervisor Das Drysdale. Smithers is claiming that Embers and Ash Ltd were negligent in failing to properly supervise Das Drysdale. The claim is brought in the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

She alleges that he made many suggestive remarks, once asking her if she had been "keeping her husband up late?" The defence objects to the introduction of this evidence on the basis that it is hearsay.

Emmylou testifies that "On April 15 2012, he dragged me into his office and used force to turn me so that I was facing him. The distance separating us was a few centimetres. He rubbed his hand up and down my forearm and fondled my breast."

Her barrister attempts to introduce into evidence a copy of CCTV footage from a camera in the hall outside the office, which shows her being pulled into the office. The original footage was in very bad shape and so was duplicated. The defence object to the introduction of this evidence.

(Question 2 continues)

Emmylou testifies that “After I escaped from his office, I went down the hall toward the washroom, my friends Verity and Veronica were there ... I told them “Das assaulted me ...he ran his hands all over me”. The defence objects to this testimony and to the plaintiff’s attempt to call Verity and Veronica to testify.

The defence seek permission to call as a witness the sexual assault counsellor that Emmylou consulted on April 17, they have reason to believe that Emmylou may have questioned whether anything in her behaviour enticed Drysdale to think she would welcome his advances.

At the end of the trial the judge comments before delivering his judgment that “I was conscious in coming to my decision of the fact that women alleging sexual assault or sexual harassment frequently exaggerate their claims and that as this is an allegation of some gravity I should need more evidence to convince me of the wrongdoing alleged.”

Comment on the evidentiary issues that arise.

Question 3

Fanciful Feathers are suing the State Rail Authority for damage to property arising out of an incident when three truckloads of feathers that were to be used in costumes were destroyed by a fire in the depot. The defendants have claimed that the cause of the fire was the intensely flammable nature of the property of which they had not been warned.

The plaintiffs have filed an interlocutory application seeking access to various documents in the possession of the defendant. First among these documents is a report that was prepared for the general manager about a possible increased risk of fire caused by the storage arrangements for the oils used in the depot. The defendant resists an order for production on the basis that it was contemplated, when the document was put together, that it would be submitted to their solicitors if a fire should eventuate.

The second document to which the plaintiff seeks access is a report on possible ways to cut costs in the operations of the Authority. This document was prepared for consideration by the NSW State Government and submitted as material for the consideration of cabinet on 1 April 2013. The Minister responsible for Transport claims that discovering this document would be contrary to the public interest.

The plaintiff’s solicitor has queried whether the fact that in a letter responding to a claim for damages the depot supervisor acknowledged that “The accident could have been caused when fumes accumulated as a result of a break down in the air conditioning, but the feathers were highly flammable.”

Discuss the bases on which the State Rail Authority might resist the claims to produce the documents sought and to prevent the use of the letter from the depot manager in evidence. How would you expect a judge to rule on these claims?
