Winter was approaching when Paul left in a galleon from Palestine to Rome. He was going there to appear before court. Before he arrived in Rome, a big tempest took place. On the galleon there were a lot of people who were afraid that they were going to drown. But Paul encouraged them and told them that not even one of them was going to get lost. Fourteen days passed as they approached land. It was night and they didn't want to hit a rock. So they threw anchor and waited for sunrise. At dawn they saw a bay and they tried to reach it. Although the sea was rough, everyone arrived safely on land. When they reached land, they came to know that the island was Malta. The Maltese lighted for them a bonfire to get warm. As Paul approached it, a viper got out and bit Paul. The people thought that he was going to fall and die. But nothing happened to Paul and the people thought that he was a god.
