Reality TV – love it or leave it.

The first reality TV show in the world was called Expedition Robinson and it was shown in Sweden in 1997. Half of the population of the country watched the final episode and a new kind of TV programme was born. Two years later in Holland, the first series of Big Brother was filmed. Again it was a fantastic success and the final programme was watched by 15 million people. There are now more than 20 countries around the world which have Big Brother or Survivor on their TV screens. The ordinary people who take part in the programmes are known by millions of people in their own countries and reality TV has become a big, big business.

For the TV producers, reality TV is a dream come true because many of the programmes cost nothing to make. At some point, the television viewers are asked to telephone the programme to vote or to take part in the show. It is the cost of these telephone calls that pays for the shows. One of the most popular shows is Pop Idol. In the show, a group of attractive people are turned into pop stars. The viewers vote for their favourite person in the show. The winners make records, their pictures are published on the covers of magazines, millions of copies of the record are sold and then... they are quickly forgotten.

But not everyone is happy about reality TV. In Portugal, two TV channels got into trouble because they showed too much of the private lives of the people in the shows. In France, reality TV is called 'rubbish TV' and the studios of Loft Story, the French version of Big Brother, were attacked three times in one week. In Greece, Big Brother was described as 'an insult to human rights and civilisation'. But despite problems, reality TV continues to do well in most countries and it will be there for some time to come.

Read the following passage carefully and then answer the questions below.

Mobile Madness

What are the advantages of mobile phones?

Surveys show more than half of UK 11 to 17-year-olds say their parents give them more freedom because they have a mobile, and they are allowed to stay out later as a result. Owning a mobile phone makes 80 per cent of young people feel safer, whether driving, shopping, or at school.

- 5 Mobiles make it easier to contact friends. According to a study by an American research group, mobiles are the most common means of socialising, and teens will often avoid contact with peers who don't have a mobile phone. In another survey, 49 per cent of 11 to 17-year-olds said they have either received text messages asking them out on a date or have sent texts to end a relationship. Is there such a thing as too much communication? Speaking about a previous relationship, 16-year-old John confessed, "I was texting my girlfriend all the time. I could have told you everything she did every minute of the day."

Many teens seem to relish this constant communication to the point where they actually feel isolated without it. Twenty-six per cent of 11 to 17-year-olds say they'd feel unwanted if a whole day went by without their mobile phone ringing. Only 11 per cent of their parents felt the same.

- 15 Two years ago, a UK medical survey made headlines when it claimed mobile phones might cause headaches, mood swings and hearing problems in up to 5 per cent of all users. The culprit? Radiation, or energy waves in the form of particles. Mobiles emit a low level of radiation through radio waves, which can be very harmful. Since you place your mobile against your ear and head, radiation comes in direct contact with head tissue. Other recent studies show that children under
- 20 eight shouldn't use mobiles because there may be a link between frequent mobile use and ear or brain tumours. A ten-year study in Sweden showed these tumours were twice as common among mobile phone users than among non-users. Sir William Stewart, chairman of the UK National Radiological protection board, says, "I don't think we can put our hands on our hearts and say mobile phones are safe. If there are risks – and we think there may be risks – then the people who
- 25 are going to be most affected are children."

But a 2006 UK study found no clear connection between brain tumours and mobile phone use for any age group. The study claims previous research failed to link mobile use to tumours or cancer. "We still don't know about the long-term effects of mobile phone use," says Dr. Kat Arney at Cancer Research UK. "That's because any health risks could take decades to show up."
