Long time ago, in a small village in Scotland, there lived a cunning man called Edward. He was greedy and stingy. He saved every single cent that he earned.

One day, Edward helped a wealthy businessman to deliver his groceries to his shop. The businessman thanked Edward and gave him a pouch that contained fifty coins. Edward was overjoyed. However, he was careless and dropped the pouch on his journey back home. Edward reported the matter to the police immediately. The police suggested that he should offer a reward to anyone who found the pouch.

A few days later, a boy called John returned Edward's pouch which was still containing the fifty coins. John asked for the reward but Edward refused to give John. Edward shamelessly claimed that there were one hundred coins in the pouch and that John had already taken his reward.

John was very angry and he went to the police. The policemen took a look at the pouch and said that the pouch was too small. It could only contain fifty coins. They decided that the pouch did not belong to Edward. The policemen gave the pouch to John instead.
