FAMILIES

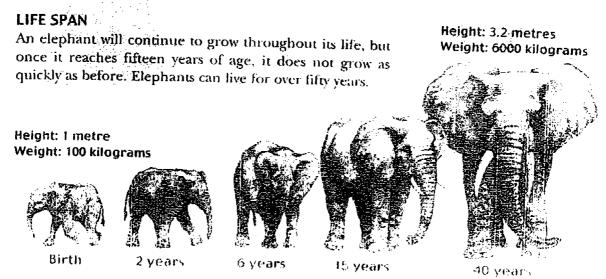

Elephants live in herds that are made up of mothers, daughters and their young. The oldest female leads the herd. Males travel with the herd when they are young but usually live alone when they are older. Within the herd, elephants look after each other.

Elephant. Of the two, the African Elephant is the larger.

HABITAT AND FOOD

Elephants live in grasslands and forests, usually near water. They move around in search of water to drink, as well as to bathe and relax in. Elephants also find water in dry riverbeds by digging with their tusks and trunks. An adult elephant drinks at least 150 litres of water a day.

Elephants eat more than 170 kilograms of food each day. They feed on grasses, shrubs, vines, leafy branches, bark, roots, fruit and berries.

Why do people willingly seek out danger? According to Dr. George Serban, an associate professor of clinical psychiatry at New York University, most men do it to prove their masculinity.

"The nature of the male animal is to undertake dangerous tasks, confront them and to succeed," Dr. Serban said. When life becomes boring and routine, Serban says, and men do not have a chance for adventure or a chance to prove their masculinity, the only other possibility for them is to undertake dangerous activities.

Eric D. Rosenfeld, who has been climbing mountains for 20 years, spoke of the habit-forming nature of his sport. "It's quite addictive," he says. "You'll get addicted to the risk factor."

In recent years, Rosenfeld has been climbing mountains in the Arctic. He contrasts the mountains in the Arctic with some in Europe. In Europe, he said, there are lines of people waiting to go up sections of mountains, guides walking around and garbage all over the place. "In the Arctic no one's around. There's no such thing as a guide because no one's ever been there."

Although several of his friends have died while mountain climbing, Rosenfeld said, "I have an intellectual appreciation that it's risky. I still sit in my law office and tell myself that after 20 years of climbing I'm still here."

No prisoner-of-war had ever escaped from Colditz Castle. "No one," said the Germans, "ever would." It was supposed to be the Nazis' most escape-proof prison. Incorrigible Allied officers who had repeatedly escaped from other camps were sent to Colditz, the only prisoner-of-war camp with more guards than prisoners.

Its record for this was still unbroken when Lieutenant Lebrun in the summer of 1941 decided to break out. It was one of the most daring escape attempts ever made. Lebrun, a French cavalry officer, was going alone. He had a little German money and nothing else. His plan for escape was desperately simple. He was going to jump out.

A fellow prisoner took up position by the first obstacle, a strong barbed wire fence nearly three metres high. A group of other prisoners were playing football. Two 10 or three more were playing leap-frog. On the other side of the fence, a few sentries looked bored. At Colditz Castle, nothing ever happened......

Lebrun was playing leap-frog. Suddenly, he ran towards his friend by the wire, who immediately cupped his hands. Lebrun placed one foot in them and gave a tremendous spring while his friend heaved upward violently. Lebrun was catapulted 15 clean over the fence and landed sprawling in the grass.

The two nearest sentries raised their rifles as Lebrun scrambled to his feet. His next obstacle was a wall about four metres high. He had worked out a method of getting over that but he would make too easy a target, so he had to draw the sentries' fire first. Keeping close enough to the wire to get some cover from it, he ran backward 20 and forward to offer them a moving target.

They fired together – and both missed. Then they had to reload. This was the moment Lebrun had been waiting for. He had jumped over the wire where it was near the outer wall and now he used it as a ladder. With his back to the wall, he climbed swiftly up the wire almost to the top, then turned round and leaped for the top of the wall, nearly two metres higher up. He just reached it.

Meanwhile, the two sentries had reloaded and the others were running to the scene. Several shots chipped the top of the wall a second or two after Lebrun had dropped to the other side...

He ran for a wheat field, which he entered backward, pulling the stalks into 30 place as he went. He hid in the middle and was so well covered that even an aeroplane searching the area failed to spot him. At night, he crept out and began his some walk to Suite and the search of the
