(10 marks)

By now, 21st-century audiences are thoroughly accustomed to jumping out of the cinema seats at the sight of axe-wielding psychos. But is it still possible to be spooked by a live performance in the theatre, which has no recourse to hair-raising, computer graphics-laden atmospherics?

If the success of the play The Woman in Black is anything to go by, the answer would appear to be yes. 5

Adapted from British writer Susan Hill's bestselling 1983 ghost story of a novel, it has been a regular fixture for fifteen straight years on London's West End.

This makes it the longest-running drama after the stage version of Agatha Christie's The Mousetrap, which is still running after fifty-one years. 10

For three weeks from July 14, the Singapore Repertory Theatre presents The Woman in Black, fresh from a four-month tour of Britain done by a separate cast from the West End production.

With an adapted script by British playwright Stephen Mallatratt, the thriller centres around the experiences of a lawyer sent to wind up the estate of an old woman who has recently died. It contains many of a quintessentially English ghost story – it is set primarily in a lonely house in the desolate countryside, and spans a 30-year period from the 1920s. 15

However, according to director Robin Herford, what has given the play the legs to travel as far as the United States, South America and Japan is just “a tremendously good story” and “simple theatrical magic”. 20

Compared to the multi-million-dollar technological wizardry of a Hollywood blockbuster, the $500,000 production uses simple tricks such as a special net gauze which can either appear rock-solid or appear to have vanished into thin air, depending on how it is lit. 25

But above all, Herford and the Singapore Repertory Theatre's artistic director Gaurav Kripalani think that The Woman in Black works because of a strong script which runs rings around the audience's imagination.

The play involves only two actors – Robin Herford plays the elderly lawyer who engages a young actor (Damien Hereford) to help him in the retelling of his tale, so as to exorcise his demons. 30

Kripalani, who has seen the play twice in London, notes its skills in “building up the expectation that the woman in black might appear at any moment”.

With a glint in his eye, he adds that ‘when she does appear, you are absolutely not expecting it’. 35

Reactions to the play have been as dramatic as its storyline.

Screams from the audience are not uncommon, and early this year, an elderly man in the audience had a heart seizure watching the play in London, which resulted in a 45-minute delay to the production while an ambulance was called.

Fortunately, he survived. 40

For each question from 31 – 35, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet.

31. How would one describe the play “The Woman in Black”?
It is a _____
- (1) play about theatrical magic
 - (2) play about exorcising demons
 - (3) ghost play that terrorises one’s imagination
 - (4) play that revolves round axe-wielding psychos
32. Which is the longest running drama on stage to date?
- (1) West End
 - (2) The Mousetrap
 - (3) The Black Widow
 - (4) The Woman in Black
33. Who wrote the script for the play “The Woman in Black”?
- (1) Susan Hill
 - (2) Robin Herford
 - (3) Gaurav Kripalani
 - (4) Stephan Mallatratt
34. Why is the play “a regular fixture for fifteen straight years on London’s West End” (line 8)?
- (1) It is only a $500 000 production.
 - (2) It has a strong script that makes use of the audience imagination.
 - (3) It builds up the expectation that the woman in black might appear at any moment.
 - (4) The director has given the play the legs to travel as far as the United States, South America and Japan.
35. In what way has the play “been as dramatic as its storyline”(line 36)?
- (1) The audience screamed.
 - (2) The play was once delayed for forty-five minutes.
 - (3) Someone had a heart seizure while watching the play.
 - (4) The artistic director was able to make things appear or vanish into thin air.

Read the passage below and answer questions 81 – 90.

(20 marks)

Ho Heng thought of his crippled son as he pedalled his trishaw. The child was a gifted artist but Ho Heng could not afford to buy him even a box of paints. He knew a box of paints would make his son very happy and even help him to become a great painter. He had been watching a beautiful box in a particular shop.

When the five-foot way was at last deserted, he quickly pedalled down the lane 5 and turned the trishaw into the shadows where he could easily jump on the saddle and vanish. He picked up the stone he had wrapped in a piece of faded blue cloth. Now that the time had come, he found ^{that} his hands were trembling and that his body had broken out into a cold sweat.

The night was cool but his face was beaded with moisture and it ran down and 10 dripped onto his soiled shirt. Numb and heavy with anxiety, he walked cautiously back along the lane and turned the corner into the five foot way.

There was no one about. Taking a tighter hold of the stone clenched in his right hand, he walked past the shoe shop, keeping close to the unlighted window. Now he was in full view of the paint-box with the lights shining down upon it. He gripped the stone. 15 The muscles of his right arm tightened and swelled. He drew it slowly backwards as if to expel the stone. But it did not leave his hand.

His throat had constricted so that he felt he was choking. The arm would no longer obey his will. He seemed to be paralysed. Suddenly, the shrill noise of a fire engine shattered the sleeping sidewalk into action. From doorways, heads appeared and 20 voices called. The sound filled their ears and was gone and with it went the helpless sobbing figure of the trishaw man, the stone still clutched in his nerveless fingers.

He had failed. Not only failed himself but the child. Something deep inside him had stayed his hand at the last moment. He kept his head bent as he pedalled miserably homewards. Suddenly a thought, swift as a sunbird, winged through his head. It was not 25 failure! It was victory!

He had tried to be a thief but his better judgment had not allowed it.

The gods had watched over him. It was a good omen. He felt calm now and at peace. Whatever happened to the child at least he could honour his father.

81. How did Ho Heng earn his living?

82. What sort of disability did Ho Heng's child have?

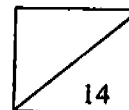

83. In line ⁷⁻⁸ 8, the phrase "Now that the time had come" suggests that Ho Heng was planning to do something. What was that "something"?

84. Why did Ho Heng break out in "cold sweat" (line 9) even though it was a cool night?

85. How was Ho Heng going to use the stone to carry out his plan?

86. Explain clearly what the sentence in lines 18-19 "The arm would no longer obey his will" means?

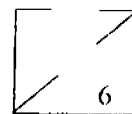

87. For what reason did the man in the five-foot way run away sobbing?

88. Give the sentence that clearly shows that Ho Heng was living in poverty.

89. When did Ho Heng realise that what had happened was not a failure but a victory instead?

90. What kind of impression did Ho Heng want his son to have of him?
