

Planning in Practice Examination paper

Answer THREE questions. In ALL your answers you should support your argument with examples drawn from the Planning in Practice lecture series, as well as any others you may choose to use.

1. What are the implications of the Planning Green Paper for planners?
2. Can planning continue to absorb more “new” policy areas, such as health policy, or is there a limit to the activities with which it should seek to engage?
3. Will the Mayor’s “Proposals” for the London Plan successfully overcome the city’s problems?
4. Does the record of the Thames Gateway development suggest that the public and private sectors can work successfully together to achieve urban regeneration? Use examples from Kent and South London to support your answer.
5. What evidence is there that European planning policy is having an impact on UK policy?
6. Are the new regional planning agencies adding value to planning practice?
