Answer ONE question only

1. How far is the concept of “clustering” actually new? What practical use could it have in urban regeneration?

 2. Consider the view that most current initiatives in “cultural regeneration” are based on inadequate understanding of the concept and are therefore bound to fail.

 3. Thirteen years after it was launched, the Thames Gateway initiative has produced little tangible result. How far does this reflect a flaw in the concept itself? Or does the problem lie in inadequate implementation?
